

Permanent Unemployment

This report was produced in 1978 when unemployment in Britain had risen to levels unknown since the Second World War and locally the west end of Newcastle was experiencing a spate of factory closures and job losses. Locating the problem in the processes of multinational restructuring, technological change and public policy, the report predicts a bleak future for the local economy and traces the impact on the local community.

