

The Making of a Ruling Class

Newcastle in the 19th century was one of the most important industrial areas in the world. This brought immense wealth to a new ruling class. Most of the traditional industries have since declined or disappeared altogether, but the families that controlled them have continued to play a central role not only in the region but also in the contemporary world of large-scale finance and multinational corporations.

